

SAN FRANCISCO, CA--(Marketwired - August 12, 2016) - After five years of a brutal bear market, gold and gold miners are finally having a huge rebound, and investor Chen Lin, writer of the popular newsletter What is Chen Buying? What is Chen Selling?, sees the parallels to 2009. He highlights nearly a dozen mining companies that have weathered the downturn and are in position to ride the wave higher.

Included in this article is: Pretium Resources Inc. (TSX: PVG) (NYSE: PVG)

Gold and silver are still looking very strong in the shoulder month of August. This year's gold and silver rebound tracks the strong rebound of 2009, the period when gold and silver rebounded off the brutal 2008 crash. Following the 2009 playbook, we should have a good second half if gold and silver continue to follow in the footsteps of 2009.

I own companies that were building new mines during the downturn and are now finishing them or are close to finishing them, companies that include Pretium Resources. Now everyone wants to build the next new gold mine. But during the downturn, only the best deposits were put into production. Pretium is finishing up a world-class mine in north British Columbia. It should start pouring gold next year, 500,000 oz/year at costs well below $500/oz.
