HSBC analysts have in a recent report stated that gold could potentially gain from the political and economic turbulence in the U.S. and by the end of the year hit $1,900 per ounce.

"Economic uncertainty, geopolitical tensions and the uncertainty of the U.S. November elections are theoretically gold-bullish," and gold should rally in the second half of the year "when U.S. growth is poor and the dollar is weak," a new HSBC report said. "We expect prices to rally to above $1,900/oz by the end of the year. Patience is the most important commodity."
